A worthy diary note

This week, retailer Witchery launched a fundraising diary for the Ovarian Cancer Research Foundation, which is working on an early-detection test for a disease that kills one woman in Australia every 10 hours, a startling statistic. I arrived late and a bit harried to hear the OCRF's co-founder Liz Heliotis is talking about how trivial deadlines, traffic jams and "bad-hair days" are when cancer strikes. Like me, Liz has two daughters, and wants a simple test for ovarian cancer, similar to a pap smear or a mammogram. All proceeds from the Every Cloud diary sales go to the OCRF, and they hope to raise $250,000. You can get it at Witchery stores now. Go to ocrf.com.au for more information.
